This teeming backbone of marine life runs the length of the Keys about five miles offshore and offers Florida Keys scuba diving vacation memories that last a lifetime. The coral formations are famous for their abundance of fish. The U.S. government established the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary to protect our marine habitat. St. Croix's north shore is one of the best-kept secrets in wall diving, and this site has two walls facing each other across a quarter mile of blue water. Hordes of reef fish swarm the tops of the walls, deep-water sea fans and black coral cling to the deeper sections, and big animals like hammerheads and black-tips sometimes make appearances. La Parguera is one of the richest areas of the island of Puerto Rico when it comes to number and variety of dive sites. The Wall at Parguera alone offers such an abundance of diving that it could keep you busy for days on end. In our immediate vicinity we have over 20 world-class dive sites, ranging from coral head formations to caves to steep walls. The Wall itself is over 22 miles long and ranges in depth from 60 to 1500 feet.
