Anthony, stage name of Lester Kroll (1902-1970). Using the names of his two sons, John (called Jack) and Anthony, he came up with John J. Anthony and began his own radio series where listeners would call in with their problems in 1930. His show is considered the first ever talk-radio program, a genre still going strong today. He proved he could counsel anyone, despite being a high school dropout. Having a stage name, he was never challenged. He came up with a clever scheme, which also was not challenged: As John J. The Goodwill Hour, taking its name from the kind gesture Mr. Anthony was doing to give them free on-air counseling sessions, began broadcasting in New York in 1937 and was eventually heard nationwide on the Mutual Broadcasting network. The name of the program was changed to the John J. Anthony Program in 1945, sponsored by Carters Products, manufacturers of Carters Little Liver Pills. John J. Anthony was on the air, under various program names but always advice oriented, for over 20 years.
